++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Morning rain followed by sunshine and showers this afternoon.

Today:
Cloudy to start as a band of rain moves south through Wales during the morning. Becoming drier with sunny spells by the afternoon, but with a risk of potentially heavy or thundery showers, especially towards the English border. Maximum temperature 22 deg C (72 deg F).

Tonight:
Cloud will thicken this evening before rain becomes widespread across Wales overnight. This will have largely cleared by morning, leaving a few patches of light rain and drizzle. Minimum temperature 8 deg C (46 deg F).

Friday:
Damp and cloudy start, it will be a day of sunshine and showers for northern and central parts, whilst staying largely clear and dry along the south coast. Feeling cool. Maximum temperature 21 deg C (70 deg F).

Outlook for Saturday to Monday:
Cloudy with showers on Saturday. Drier on Sunday with sunny spells, especially further north. A fine start to Monday with potentially heavy rain arriving over the south later.
